North Shore Wedding Photography Workshops Draws Participants from Around New England

Salem, MA, March 1, 2011—Recently, Louise Michaud Photographer (<http://www.louisemichaud.com/>), one of the best-known photographers on the North Shore of Boston, held two well-attended digital photography workshops for students interested in learning how to shoot weddings. The classes were held at the company's Salem, MA studio.

According to Michaud, "The workshops were attended by amateur photography students who traveled from all over New England, and it was very well received." She goes on to state that, "A lot of people are interested in taking wedding photography classes, and since I have been a wedding photographer for over twenty five years, it is a natural for me to teach this workshop."

"I would highly recommend attending one of Louise Michaud's Wedding Workshops. I attended one...which was thoroughly informative, very organized, and a great learning experience. Louise certainly knows her craft and, most importantly, is a very skillful lecturer and teacher of Wedding Photography. If you're serious about shooting weddings, you can learn much from a Louise Michaud Workshop," stated photographer, Winston D. Munnings.

Louise Michaud (formerly Louise Skerry of Derby Studios) has been lecturing and teaching photography workshops to professionals for years, and recently began offering her own digital photography classes. The next wedding photography workshop will be held in April.
